

Worcestershire Recorders

Recording nature in Worcestershire

Worcestershire Recorders is a society for all naturalists interested in observing, recording and studying natural history in Worcestershire

Worcestershire Recorders work closely with the Worcestershire Biological Records Centre (WBRC). Species Records collected by Worcestershire Recorders are added to the WBRC database.

Biological recording

- Increases understanding.
- Increases knowledge and records information for the future.
- Satisfies our curiosity and is endlessly fascinating and enjoyable.

Helps to provide

- Constantly updated accurate knowledge of Worcestershire's wildlife.
- Important information for wildlife conservation and of protected species.
- Important information for assessing planning and development projects and for land management.
- Information for monitoring the effects of climate change and human activity on wildlife.

What do you get when you join?

- The journal and newsletter Worcestershire Record twice a year: A4, 60-100 pages each issue, colour illustrations, notes and papers on all aspects of nature in Worcestershire. You can contribute if you wish. It acts as a communication channel across all interests.
- An opportunity to attend an annual meeting with presentations by national and local speakers.
- An opportunity to attend four recording field days each summer.
- Your records are preserved and used.
- Contact with like-minded people.
